Making a comeback, in a big way.

When you hear the phrase 'cork flooring' your mind might immediately go to '70s interior design – potentially with images of patterned wallpaper, geometric shapes, and a whole lotta velvet.

The best of the '70s is back, and that includes cork flooring in all its glory (but maybe not so much the crazy wallpaper).

02 — Sustainability

The Sustainable Option

Cork is harvested from the renewable bark of the cork oak tree, making it a sustainable and 100% natural product.

A cubic centimeter of cork contains around 40 million cells, arranged in rows perpendicular to the trunk of the oak tree. These cells are filled with a mixture of gases similar to air, making up around 60% of the corks volume. This high gas content is what gives the cork its exceptional lightness. The presence of these small pockets of air in the cellular structure of cork also makes it highly compressible. When pressure is applied, the cells can be compressed and then quickly return to their original shape, thanks to the elasticity of the tissue.

Additionally, the walls of the cork cells are impermeable and airtight due to a substance called suberin. This airtightness traps the gases within the cells, resulting in the elasticity of the cork and its low thermal conductivity.

The combination of the cellular structure, the presence of gases, and the impermeability of cork cells contribute to its remarkable compressibility, elasticity, lightness, and insulation capabilities. These qualities make cork a highly versatile and sought-after material for various applications.

Going above and beyond, naturally.

Cork by Kustom Timber® is sourced exclusively from sustainable cork growing regions in Portugal.

Using techniques passed down through generations, cork is harvested cyclically without any damage to the tree, producing a completely regenerative and sustainable product.

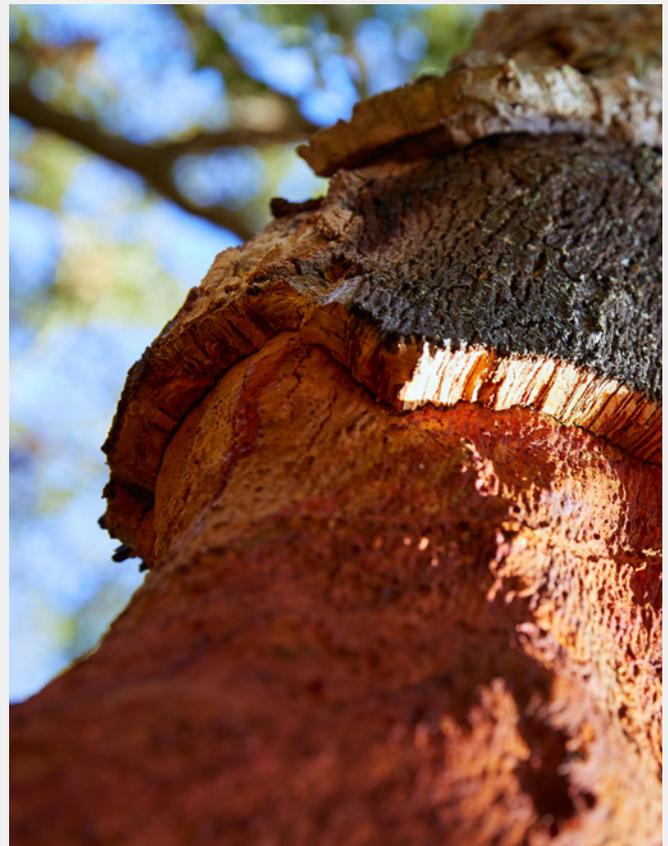

The properties of cork make it an all-purpose problem solver, suitable for a wide range of housing and commercial applications.

Carbon neutral, meet carbon negative.

Cork flooring is the epitome of sustainability. Made from the regenerative bark of the cork oak tree, cork flooring is renewably sourced.

Better yet, the process doesn't harm the cork tree, and the manufacturing is designed to have the smallest possible ecological footprint. It's a win-win-win!

- 🌿 100% natural and completely renewable.
- 🌿 We do not cut down trees to harvest cork.
- 🌿 Carbon negative - the cork production and manufacturing process produces a negative CO2 footprint.
- 🌿 The Mediterranean cork forest processes 14 million tons of carbon dioxide each year.

Allergen Inhibiting

Cork flooring's anti-static nature makes it resistant to dust, allergens, and toxins, making it an ideal option for a cleaner home. The natural antimicrobial and water resistant properties actively prevent the accumulation of trapped dirt, dust, germs, mold, and mildew, actively promoting a healthy and hygienic environment.

Uniquely Tactile

Ever enjoyed the springiness of a wine cork? Imagine that gentle bounce underfoot, easing joint pressure and enhancing overall comfort.

Durable and Versatile

Soft yet resilient, cork's cellular structure makes it resistant to dents, scratches, and daily wear and tear.

Sound Absorber

Cork is a natural sound absorber due to its honeycomb structure filled with air which absorbs the sound and vibrations. Cork Flooring is a perfect choice for home theaters, media rooms, offices and conference rooms. It is exceptionally efficient for use in houses and apartments where noise reduction is critical.

Naturally Insulating

Cork's natural insulation properties also help moderate your home's temperature - warm in winter, cool in summer.
